PRESENTATION

The religious views of Judaism and Christianity always valued historicity. The theological reflection and social proposals of Christianity seek to articulate time and eternity, history and eschatology, incorporating and developing notions of tradition, utopia and reform. In this sense, the return to the sources, the search for new forms of mediation in the relationship between religion and society, ethics and politics, thought and action, are constant in the history of Christianity. The centrality of the religious reforms movement in modernity shows it very clearly, thus contributing to the development of various forms of Christian confessionality.

The search for links and forms of articulation between religious reform and social reformism before and after the Reformation era emerges as the central topic of this colloquium.
